Peer observation of teaching is intended to cultivate a culture of instructional excellence and improvement. As of 2023, peer observation of teaching is also a requirement for any faculty member (regardless of rank or track) seeking academic promotion. TEACH can be a great resource for this service. A peer teaching observation can be done by any trusted teaching colleague that is a faculty member in good standing within the observee’s appointment-granting school. See guidelines for assistance here!

The World’s Technological Capacity to Store, Communicate, and Compute Information [Research Article]
The article estimates global technological capacity from 1986 to 2007, revealing exponential growth in storing, communicating, and computing information, with digital technologies dominating by the early 2000s.

Artificial Intelligence Behind Improved Clinical Skills Assessment and Teaching [Article]
This article discusses the COVID-19 pandemic and disruptions of traditional methods of assessing medical students' clinical skills, leading to a pause in in-person exams. Institutions like the University of Minnesota are exploring innovative solutions, including the use of artificial intelligence, to fill the gap in assessing clinical skills.

AAMC Establishes International Advisory Committee for Artificial Intelligence
The AAMC has convened an International Advisory Committee for AI, in collaboration with several international medical education organizations and institutions. The AI advisory committee is intended to provide insights and recommendations on AI and is part of a broader effort by the AAMC to support the medical education community in establishing connections and sharing AI innovations in the field. Sign up for the MedBiq newsletter and monitor the committee's dedicated webpage for updates. You can also check out the Artificial Intelligence and Medical Education resource bundle.
